History of Woodgate

A brief look at Woodgate

The Kabi group Dundaburra are traditionally connected to the area.

The Woodgate Beach public library opened in 1993 with a minor refurbishment in 2009.

Woodgate was first named Ascot by Charles West the proprietor of a coach service between Bundaberg and Maryborough.

Woodgate was a coastal watering place for the residents of Childers, the surrounding Isis Shire and Bundaberg.

Allotments about 300 metres back from the beach were roughly subdivided, providing flexible access for buggies through sandy soils and with space for animals to graze.

There was a short-lived school, built in 1921 and remained operational until 1922 for half a dozen children and an angling club was formed in 1936.

Swimming enclosures were built and in 1939 joint action between the shire and Bundaberg led to the formation of the Woodgate Surf Life Saving Club.

Most of the landscape was flat to undulating wallum and in 1948 the Woodgate State Forest was reserved and harvested until 1970. It was gazetted as a National Park in 1974.

Comprising 5500 hectares which adjoins the town and extends to the Burrum River inlet.

Woodgate changed from a casual holiday spot to a town in the 1970's. In rapid progression the original bowls club was built (1973) and a community hall transferred from Isis Central Mall (1974).

Water had been obtained from wells and securing a central reticulated system proved difficult. Development was vigorous during 2000's. Shoreline apartments were a step-up from previous standards. Town sewage was installed in 2005 and the Isis Shire brought in a foreshore management plan.

Fast –Forward to 2011, the census data showed us that half of the total number of houses are not the primary dwelling with the intention being for holiday and weekend use.

Woodgate has a large community centre (replacing the hall burnt down in 1991), a hotel-motel, a tourist park and other holiday accommodation, local shops, a bowling club and a progress association.

Many houses are for holiday and weekend use. At the 2011 census the median age of Woodgate residents was 61, compared with 37 for Australia.
